

Week 10

← Back to Home

Documentation

During the peer review and critique session, I did not make it to the live presentation and feedback activities. However, I was still able to engage with the process by reviewing the feedback posted on Padlet from my peers. This allowed me to understand how my progress report slideshow and project were perceived by others, even though I was not present during the discussion.

Overall, the feedback highlighted that my app concept is strong and relevant, particularly in addressing loneliness and supporting user wellbeing. Peers generally understood the purpose of my project, which shows that the core idea is clear. However, several comments identified areas for improvement, especially in relation to user experience and design clarity. A recurring point was that the navigation could be simplified to make the app easier to use, particularly for first-time users. Technical feedback also suggested improvements to spacing, font sizes, and visual hierarchy to enhance readability and overall presentation.

The most significant insight from the feedback was the importance of onboarding and user guidance. It was noted that new users may struggle to understand how to begin using the app, which could impact engagement. This is a key area I now need to improve.

Moving forward, I will focus on refining the onboarding experience to make it clearer and more structured. I will also improve the visual design by adjusting spacing, typography, and layout consistency. In addition, I will review the navigation flow to ensure it is simple and intuitive. Although I did not attend the session, the written feedback still provided valuable direction for improving my project.